WRITING KILLS

Addressing an audience in analytical writing is very important. There are certain specific aspects that apply to a given audience that have to be incorporated into the analysis. This will ensure that the audience in question gets the message exactly as it was intended.

Purpose is perhaps the most important factor in constructing an analysis. This is because purpose helps with structuring the analysis. Knowledge of a clear purpose will reduce chances of deviation from the main aim of the analysis.

The writing context affects the analytical text because the analysis has to be in line with the writing context. The choice of topic affects the research conducted because it dictates the methods of data collection as well a presentation. The strongest part of the analysis is the introduction because it encompasses all aspects of the analysis. The weakest part is the assumptions because they have not been proven.

Voice and tone contribute to the effectiveness of the essay because they dictate how the audience will receive the essay. The tone employed is a candid tone
