How do you see the MBA degree contributing the applicant's achievement of management progression in his or her organization MBA is a highly professional degree; the candidate learns professionalism and brings these practices into the organization. The applicant learns Business strategy and implements it in his organization. He develops the vision of the organization, the targets and understands the strengths and weaknesses of the organization. He/she tries to remove the weaknesses and increases the strengths. At the same time he/she sees the opportunities that the organization has and clearly understands the threats to it. With the picture clear before his/ her eyes he/she develops the marketing strategy. This strategy is based on his real analysis of the market conditions.

Having done his homework, he then implements the strategy in actual sense. He works hard and takes all the efforts to succeed. This in turn helps the organization to be successful and achieve its targets. The MBA degree imbibes the habits of success in the candidate's psyche, which he/she keeps on implementing where he/she goes.

The candidate learns a lot about finance, which helps him understand the prevalent economic conditions of not only his organization but also the whole market. He also learns about professional organizational practices, which he implements in his organization. He learns about the general human behavior patterns and tackles his subordinates, his colleagues and bosses in proper manner without hurting anybody even in a slight manner.

The candidate learns about leadership qualities and develops those qualities in him. He leads the organization by an example making it highly successful.

He keeps all his colleagues and subordinates happy and creates ample opportunities for them. At the same time he also sees that his organization contributes towards the social causes.
