Importance of doing well in school As kids we all saw the excitement about high school on TV, The drinking, driving, partying etc. But no one told us that TV and reality were to different things. There are many consequences for those actions. Many teens think its okay to mess up their first or second year in high school not understanding it can hurt you from the very beginning. Doing poorly in school can hurt you when it's time to graduate, it also can affect you when applying to colleges. School is very important and should be taking seriously for you and also to make your parents proud. There are different requirements for graduating high school and grades are the most important. If you slack off in the beginning of high school and try to change in your last year or two it can really hurt you. Your GPA is determined from the first report card you get when entering school. Your GPA moves two times a year which makes it very hard to bring it up when it is low. In high school you have to stand your ground and avoid peer pressure. Fooling around in class with friends isn't going to get you anywhere. Your friends can be fooling around with you but are getting good grades. It's one man for himself in this world so you have to do what you have to do to go where you want to go. Colleges look at everything when determining if they want to accept you. They will like to see kids successful throughout all years in high school, the ones who maintain high standards. They will see when your attendance and discipline record. If done poorly in these areas it can affect their decisions. Colleges want the best of the best, not the kids who turned around as a junior or senior and their GPA is very low. We all want to be successful in life and that success starts in school. Many parents work hard to be as successful as they are today. Many have been inspired by their kids to keep striving for the best. Parents do the best they can to make sure their kids are doing well in school and giving them what they want. No parent wants their child heading down the wrong path. Nothing can pay back a parents but the least we can do as kids is maintain good grades in school. Parents are proud when they see their child trying to be something in life. Not only do you want to do well in school for your parents but you do it for yourself. It's very beneficial to you, the more education you have the more money you get. Who doesn't like money? School can be your biggest downfall or your greatest achievement. It's very important that you do well in school so you can graduate and attend college. It's not only to make your parents proud but it's the determination of your future.
