real and unpretentious.

After taking an overall study of the relationships within the Novel The Great Gatsby, dishonesty seems to be very common. That is most of the marriages do not have a completely clean record of faithfulness. However, the dishonesty that exists between the couples in the novel is betrayal in nature. However, it is evident that most of the characters begun their dishonesty in the very first times of conversation with the subject victims of cheating. For example, Jay Gatsby starts by making a categorical lie about his personal background to Daisy Buchanan. He did this in a bid to show her that he was capable of taking care for her financially. However, it is very clear that he does not win her. However, if this relationship were to hold, then it would not last for long before they broke up.
