Sociology, Communication

Modern Technology Technology has increased within the last ten years. It has made communication much easier and more convenient. People communicate on a daily basis, and with modern technology, people can communicate much easier and faster. Modern technology has changed the way teens deal with one another by increasing communication, making communication faster, and decreasing the amount of time spent face to face. First, modern technology has changed the way teens deal with one another by increasing communication. Nowadays teens have cell phones. Most teenagers wouldn't know what to do without their cell phone. They say it's their life. They are texting, IM'ing, face booking, or talking. It's also their camera and their music player. Ten years ago teens didn't have cell phones. They had to use their home phone, which was inconvenient because they would have to wait until they got home from school to talk to anybody. When using the home phone you never know if your friends are home or available. Having a cell phone you can talk whenever and wherever you want. Second, modern technology has changed the way teens deal with one another by having faster communication. Ten years ago people would communicate through handwritten letters. Now teens can communicate through emails. Emails are a much faster way of communicating because you can receive an email within minutes; whereas letters take at least a couple days to arrive. Also, now teens have cell phones so they can send text messages. Ten years ago they didn't have cell phones so they couldn't just send a text whenever they wanted to. It makes it much more convenient for teens to interact with one another. Finally, modern technology has decreased the way teens interact with one another face to face. Teens have started using Skype to interact with one another. You can see one another while talking to them without holding a phone or using minutes. Teens are more into the modern technology than the way things used to be where you had to meet face to face with your friends and family to see them. Ten years ago you would have to meet up with your friends and family to be able to see them, which was hard if you never had the spare time between work and school. Now you can Skype them and be able to see and talk to them no matter what you are doing. Modern Technology continues to grow daily. Over the past ten years, it has made vast advances in many fields of study but especially in communication. The advances in volume, technique and speed of communication has put some form of Modern Technology in the hands of teens everywhere.
