

Response

Linguistics, English

Response It was like that when we got here. When my friend and I came to Boston to study, we found an environment that is different from what we had imagined. Some of the happenings were good while others did not please us. One of the best things that we like about Boston is organization. The order of activities is executed in an organized manner. This makes learning very efficient. In addition, the tutors are committed to teaching the students. However, a significant portion of the students is fairly committed to learning and mostly concentrates to other activities that include smartphones and social media. Others like watching television for lengthy periods and spend a lot of time talking about it with their friends at school. From my expectations, I expected to see a full time commitment. On the other hand, the other thing that I did not expect to see is some form of discrimination against my friend and I. Although this did not bother me much, I expected to experience fairness and equal treatment of individuals. I came to find out that it was because of my race. Moreover, partying is a central part of the Boston students, which interrupts most of the students' learning activities. However, in spite of that, the tutors are good to my friend and me. If we seek any type of clarification, the teachers are ready to assist. This makes learning easier for us and has given us the appropriate morale. Although there are some unfavorable situations, we will concentrate with our studies because it was like that when we got here.