

Video games are not a bad influence on children

Entertainment, Video Games

Majority of people think that video games are a bad influence on children and teens. Children need to know what is right from wrong and the people that can teach them is their parents. Children need to realize reality from fiction. Schoolteacher can also help the children with the reality. I believe that video games do not have a bad influence on children.

Parents need to teach their children that video games are only games and the things that are done in the games are things that can not be done in the real world. Video games have more violence now than usual, but the parents should teach their children that violence is not the way to solve anything. Majority of the young parents accept the violence video games because they themselves grew up with those games and they want their children to go up with them as well.

The old generations didn't grow up with video games and the new generation is. The faculty and staff of the school can also prevent violence, because just as much as children are with their parents they are with the faculty and staff at the school. When a child does or even makes a gesture it's up to the faculty or staff to put a stop to it. If the faculty or staff does not put a stop to the bad gesture then the child is going to think it's ok and he is going to keep doing it.