

Nyeri one in all the large cities within

Business, Industries

Nyeri town is an electoral constituency established in 1988 as a result of the elections held in that year.

It has a strategic location in the Kenyan Central Highlands. The town was established within the British colonial era and was the previous headquarters of the previous Central Province. Despite being one in all the large cities within the newly created Nyeri County, the town has a comparatively little but vibrant business community thanks to the actual fact that it's principally a government administration town.

The current state in the constituency with regard to standards of living is comparatively low since there's plenty of food and water as a result of its significant position in the highlands. Education The constituency has two institutions of higher learning which are Dedan Kimathi University of Technology and Karatina University College. The town also has satellite campuses from the University of Nairobi and Kenyatta University. Just 10.8 km from the town is the National Police Training College. The constituency has a medical college, a government school of nursing, 2 engineering schools and several other non-public and public secondary faculties and primary faculties.

Religion The main religion in the town is Christianity with denominations such as Catholic, Presbyterian, Anglican and Pentecostals including various indigenous denominations. The minority is comprised of Muslims and Hindus which is mainly among the younger generation. Economy The most significant employers in the constituency are sectors such as the service industry and the religious bodies such as the Catholic Church. However, the Government is the largest formal employer in addition to the Local Municipality.

Coca-Cola an international brand has a bottling plant for its products but the town also has several coffee, tea, milk processing and packaging factories. This is just a glance at the multiple industrial plants constituted in the town. The locale of the constituency gives it an edge in farming due to the favorable weather conditions and fertile areas. Farming done in the constituency mostly applies human labor and has steadily grown to become the major factor for economic growth since the residents heavily rely on it for their livelihoods. The town is known to have exciting tourist destinations such as the Aberdare and the Mount Kenya National Parks. The hospitality industry also thrives on its world-class hotels which offer a pleasurable stay whether long term or short term.
