

Business ethics

Business

Business Ethics Business ethics refer to how people should behave in the world of buying and selling. Business people view business ethics in different perspectives. Some view it as undertaking business activities by eliminating criminal activities. Others examine it as doing business avoiding actions which will result to civil law that are not in favor of the company (Henn. S. K 192). The other group of business people takes it as avoiding activities that portray bad image of the company. If the above are not considered as business ethics the the business institutions may suffer loss or may earn the business bad reputation. Business people believe that if good business ethics are adhered to then the business will experience an upward trend with a lot of profit.

Syriana is a movie that explains how the world relates in terms of business. The plot revolves around the business interrelation that exists between China, Iran and the United States of America. It begins with a missile that vanishes in Iran. This creates tension among security forces in the US and the CIA is the most affected. Funny enough this does not worry them as they have something else bigger to worry about. In relation to this the new owner of the Emirates oil company gives a deal to China and cuts out a company from US that reacts by firing all its workers who are not of the native origin and goes further to combine with an undersized firm which has just landed on an oil contract in Kazakhstan. The US unit of justice notices bribery in the oil firm's law unit finds its way out by identifying a scapegoat. Bribery is against business ethics and it brings a bad picture of the company. The CIA needs to find a scapegoat as well after the mission of eliminating Emir-apparent backfires. This can be described as unethical skills of doing business because it is engaging in criminal activities so as to gain certain <https://assignbuster.com/business-ethics-essay-samples-2/> interest. Bob Barnes a CIA agent looks into the whole saga which is considered to be a double cross. An economist from America sacrifices his son to come into contract with sheik which entailed advising him that the CIA wants him dead. The unemployed Pakistanis enter into a fundamentalist set. The movie features current events in the business world such as oil trade. The world depends on oil and people would do anything to ensure that they have this commodity even if it means breaking business ethical rules. Traders also would fall under the same perception since they are the profitable ventures. As a result of this corruption and fraud will occur due to the high ambitious society. In conclusion, business ethics should be the key master to a successful business no matter the circumstances and the self ambitions that might be a factor in the long run. The movie looks into the errors in the world's economy by analyzing the major trading partners that is china, the US and Iran and demonstrates how unethical business concept bring about political instability.

References

Shaw. H. W. (2011). Business Ethics. Boston: Wadsworth. Print

Henn, S, K. (2009). Business Ethics. New York: Hoboken. Print

Ferrell . O, John . F, Linda F. (2011). Ethical decision making cases. New York. South Western Publishers. Print