

Mph502 - introduction to public health module 3 - case

ASSIGN BUSTER

Running Head: Public health law in new century Public health law in new century Health is one of the most important issues these days; a number of people are getting more serious about their health day by day. The article highlights five major issues are: government responsibility toward public health sector, population based perspective of health, the bridge between government and populace, Objective and services of public health system, the power to coerce individuals and businesses for community's protection. The Article focuses on public health law; the law alters the physical, economical, social and informational environment. The author states that the constitutions show that the government is solely responsible for public health (Grad, 1990). The constitutional design reveals a plain objective in government to protect community health and safety. Government has great responsibilities towards public health sector; health is not only indispensable to finance but also to individuals. Public health is a collective action not only government can save the community's health. On this point, I completely agree with the author, as if individuals work alone, they cannot save the minimum level of health. Government support is always needed for this great cause.

According to the author, it is quiet difficult to separate government responsibility and individual's effort. Public health also takes in account the individuals that stake a claim to health protection. A strong relationship exists between individual's health and the health of community at large. I completely agree with author that public health efforts need collective actions for better results because it's nearly impossible to improve health sector without governments help.

Public health law states the advantages and burdens by government on <https://assignbuster.com/mpH502-introduction-to-public-health-module-3-case/> individuals and private health sectors on legally protected interest.

Government acts for health sector, it may de-motivate individuals to invest in health sector. The law address that how government act on the growth of health sector both individuals and a large population. Author point is valid up to some extent as both public and private sector has own responsibilities.

Government has primary responsibility to promote both mental and physical health and prevent injury and disability. Government responsibility is to inform, educate individuals and invest heavy amount on health.

Public health law focuses on governmental responsibilities to the community and individuals health. Government can do much for public health as it owns thousands of resources and power. Government is authorized to take strong actions to require conformance established standards of conduct.

Government can reduce the harm of risk by forcing law.

Conclusion

Article highlights the five issues of public health and focuses on government responsibilities towards health sector. There is one issue needs to be considered that not only government has responsibility of improving health status in country but individuals have also some significant responsibilities towards their own health. Government can educate, inform and motivate people about health issues but to conduct proper follow up of all awareness is the solely responsibility of individuals. The article also highlights law statements about public health and government responsibilities.

References

Grad, FP., (1990), Public Health Law Manual. 2nd ed. Washington, DC:

American Public Health Association.

<https://assignbuster.com/mpH502-introduction-to-public-health-module-3-case/>