False Information In The New York Times Example: The New York Times published false information on the collapse of the Wall Street Collapse 2008. In this report, the media house published a narrative that the Glass-Steagall Act repeal in 1999 had nothing to do with the major collapse of Wall Street in 2008.

Reason why it is deceitful

In earlier news publication, The New Times had already admitted in one of its editorial pages that it was wrong for the economic advisors to repeal the Glass-Steagall suggesting that the news power house already knew that it was the repeal of the act that caused or led to the collapse of Wall Street in 2008. In this case, the New York Times implicated itself by publishing a new story on what actually transpired.

The valid evidence

The evidence of this deceit was the admission of a New Time's columnist in July 30 where he criticizes John McCain and Elizabeth Warren for the introduction of the Glass-Steagall Act meant for separating insured deposit banks from the gambling casinos and the investment banks of Wall Street. Therefore, the earlier publication was an admission that the Glass-Steagall Act did cause the collapse of Wall Street in 2008.

Book Entry

Example:

In the novel, Dmitri and Fyodor Pavlovich are engaged in a false shout out. The author uses this conflict to bring about the misunderstandings between the two characters who are actually quarrelling over a woman they are both in love with.

The Reason why it is deceitful

The fight between Dmitiri and Fyodor is made to appear like a normal misunderstanding between two people but the author does not explain at the first time the reason as to why the two are shouting at each other. However, as novel later reveals, the two men fight over a woman in the pretext of a simple misunderstanding.

Evidence of deceit

Later in the novel, there is substantive evidence suggesting that the two characters are fighting over a woman. For instance, Dmitiri leaves his fiancé Katerina in pursuit of Grushenka while Pavlovich also promises to give the woman 3, 000 rubbles for agreeing to become his lover.
