In catholic mass the priest are prohibited by the rubrics of the mass. “‘Eulogy’ is not part of our catholic tradition, and it doesn’t belong in a catholic funeral mass” November 2010 Religion and Philosophy Collection article “ Let’s Bury the Eulogy” As we did learn in the history that the word eulogy is Greek for word of praise, the catholic take these words in another content. we come to bury Caesar and not to praise the wretch, as Shakespeare says, because the only one we praise in liturgy is Christ” Again November 2010 Religion and Philosophy Collection article “ Let’s Bury the Eulogy” Sign Post: Since you now know where and how eulogies are used today, now we can discuss the components used when writing one. A eulogy is most often delivered by a family member, friend, or even colleagues. The individual who is giving the speech is also the one who wrote it. When preparing and giving a eulogy there are many different components one must consider.

There are so many different ideas to consider but if you can focus and remember these five, preparing and delivering a eulogy will be easy. Decide on which approach is appropriate for you some writers take the serious approach, while others bring humor. It doesn't matter which one you use but it is important to have a conversational tone as if you are talking to friends. The speaker needs to consider their audience. Does not matter what occasion focus on the positive aspects of the person talking about, even if they do have flaws.

Be specific, by making it personal with a story not wanting to just list qualities about the person or achievements they have made. As the writer and speaker you want to be concise and well-organized, so like in any public speaking make an outline, and brainstorm areas that you can talk about, as well as being interesting and avoid rambling. You will want to rehearse, reread the eulogy you have written out loud. These will help with making sure it sounds appropriate and if you need to change it. Conclusion
