Education, Teaching

Every individual is diverse in one way or the other as we have differences, and they are an important aspect for developing a society as a whole. I personally define an inclusive environment when people can easily express themselves, have their own opinions and various points of view to a certain matter.

An inclusive or a diverse environment is where one can freely participate in working, teaching other people and have a social mindset towards activities. It is where one can feel safe from biased criticism, abuse or harassment due to their culture, ethnicity and color. A key term is privilege. They are the benefits gained by a dominant group based on skin color, gender, religion and trying to be an able-bodied individual. The American University boasts of the certain values and believes in the following:- An Individual student can participate wholly in class, can study better, aim to achieve good results with less stress. - The staff at the university can freely and fully interact and express themselves with other staff and the students.

- The University will benefit from cultural diverse staff and students through different outlooks and experiences. In the AUX Course, Race, social identity, ethnicity, class, disability, gender and religion are often discussed in an oblique way. I learnt that the AUX experience would want these debates to go forward and learn about them beyond the customs of the university.

The course would help me develop, structure or be a building block before one learns about various cultures. It would make one be a part of the community of learners whose members come from various types of backgrounds and bring with them a range of experiences. There is pride within oneself when in a mixture of people, with different beliefs and values. A diverse community not only encompasses various races, religions and ethnicities but has different social backgrounds, different experiences, various countries each individual comes from.
