English 102 Reflections

Looking back the past semester in the course of English 102, I have made some tremendous improvements in my writing skills and feel that I have really benefitted from the course. Of course, nothing good comes easy, and true to this, I faced some challenges which I braced and came out really successful and improved.

For I have gained the ability to develop ideas thoughtfully in line with the question at hand. This is evident through my essay on definition argument on abortion. In the essay, I chronologically arranged my thoughts on abortion, right from definition to the statistics on abortion. I also introduced the issue of legalization of abortion and supplied evidence to support my thoughts in line with the thesis that I had formulated that abortion should be allowed. In the Bad Teacher Movie Review, I started off by giving the plot of the movie. Therefore, as I proceeded to the analysis bit, the reader of my essay would not be lost.

Above all, I gained the skills on how to find the relevant materials to support my arguments and theses. For instance, in the Bad Teacher Movie Review essay, I drew the sources from credible sources that are directly related to the movie. On the two essays regarding abortion, I realized that the topic was controversial and therefore needed careful consideration. With this in mind, I was careful to draw from highly credible sources such as the World Health Organization. I provided the proper in-text citations and also provided proper bibliographic lists at the end of my essays. This added authenticity to my work.

I also employed structures and formats that are conventional and widely acceptable. To make my work even more acceptable, I supported my arguments with verifiable statistics. I also applied the proper, formal language as directed in the English 102 syllabus. From the above reflections, I feel that I have successfully completed this course, and am now more than ready to proceed to the next level of writing.
