As we know, Malaysia is a country practices a constitutional monarchy and parliamentary democracy system which is follow by the British Westminster system. It includes 3 main organs of the government which is legislature, executive and judicial. These 3 branches practice different powers in state or country. They play an important role in our country especially for our socio-political landscape. This is because they need to stabilize national security and create an organized country. Even they have some certain power to society but they don't have the authority to make abuse of power on other individual such as banished the citizen.

According to article 4(1) of Malaysian Federal Constitution, constitution is the supreme law of federation. The first important of doctrine of separation power to uphold the spirit of Malaysian Federal Constitution is it can protect the right of citizen because Malaysia is a democratic country which is their citizens have the freedom to speech, expression and they can participate in election. This article mentioned on right and it has been shown the important of Constitution of Malaysia towards citizen. Hence, every citizen of Malaysia is equal and no one can take advantage on anyone due to their power.

Furthermore, article 4(1) of Malaysian Federal Constitution imposes the law has been passed and made by Parliament or Legislature of the state cannot be disputed or be questioned.

It is important to separate the power of Parliament and Legislature precisely in law. This is to avoid confusing of power and role even to prevent argument within this power. State Legislative Assemblies can also make law in particular situation or matters.
