Should the death Penalty be legal or illegal Dzhokhar Tsarnaev the bomber who caught America's attention. The story of his crime and punishment began with the shocking bloodbath at the 2013 Boston Marathon. The manhunt that paralyzed a city and the death sentence handed down by a federal jury on May 15 after a two phase trial. Justice has been done, in the opinion of 70% of those surveyed Washington Post-ABC News poll in April. Support for capital punishment has been an issue recently, but it remains a strong situation like this. Now, Tsarnaev is in no danger of imminent death. He is one of many 60 federal prisoners under sentence of execution.

Dzhokhar Tsarnaev is now inside a Supermax, the country's most strict and secure prison, located in Florence, Colorado. The United States remains one of nations in the world that still doesn't use the death as penalty for certain crimes. Many see the penalty as a "barbaric and against American values." says Washington Post-ABC News poll. Others see it as a very important tool in fighting violent pre-meditated murder. Two things have once again brought this issue to a world debate.

One issue is the release of some studies that show a number of innocent people had been put to death. The second issue is the punishment for mass murders. Barbaric and violates the Bill of Rights Whether it's a gas chamber, electric chair, or hanging, lethal injection it's barbaric to allow states to murder before a crowd of people. We hostility Kim Jong Il when they murder their own people while we continue in their footsteps.

The U. S. constitution, 8th amendment prevents the use of "cruel and unusual punishment". Many polls ran by the Washington Post-ABC News poll think the death penalty is violating this amendment. Life punishment and more effective? Many people don't feel much sympathy for a murderer, keep in mind that death may be too good for them. With a death sentence, the pain is over at an instant.

With life in prison, the pain goes still that person dies. Prisoners are confined to a cage and live in an environment of where they are treated as animals. And consider terrorists. Do you think they would rather suffer the humiliation of lifelong prison or be honored for their own death? An example is the September 11 attacks a series of four coordinated terrorist attacks by the Islamic terrorist group al-Qaeda launched an attack on the United States. They were willing to sacrifice their life for their leader to go with their plan. What would have been a better ending for Islamic terrorist group al-Qaeda, the bullet that killed them instantly, or a life of humiliation in an American prison. Strong religious beliefs like Christianity, don't except the death penalty. Some find it compelling the thought that Cain, the first murderer, was not executed but was marked with a special sign and made a wanderer upon the face of the earth.

As Richard Viguerie developed his position on a capital punishment by asking what Christ would say and do about it. "I believe that a strong case can be made," (Mr. Viguerie, 21) wrote in a recent book, "that Christ would oppose the killing of a human being as punishment for a crime." This is supported by the New Testament in the bible about the woman who faced execution by stoning.
