The elongated feathers of social values embedded in the Middle Eastern culture can never leave any American untouched. The system of upbringing a child with moral values, blend of provincial, official and national languages and in the beam of religion can be another captivating sight for any American. From a lullaby to national songs, from classical to pop, Middle Eastern music is enriched with melodies and rhythms an American might not have imagined. One of the most different experiences for any American can be found in literature, art and drama is the concept of love which demonstrates the true eastern values of soul. This will be true to say that Middle Eastern culture can give an American the secret to living a healthy and happy life.

When it comes to my potential to serve for the development of cross-culture, I tend to follow the same steps of my cultural and historical values: teaching and learning. I can create awareness about the fruitfulness of cultural exchange programs by writing and talking. I can give services to foreigners visiting my country of origin by providing them deep and profound secrets of my land. If I get any chance to visit a foreign country either on exchange programs or not, I will be exhibiting my own customs and tradition in dressing, events, and celebrations to help the people of that country understand my culture. This way I would contribute to the development of cross-cultural activities. In contrast to this, for the contribution to the development of a cross-cultural perspective, I would also be inquisitive, appreciating and absorbing the values, customs and traditions of the other land. I would like to know the historical and cultural dome and the values upon which that nation is standing. the art, literature, and cinema of that country and know the sense of creativity, beauty, and color of that country practically. Also, the food and cuisine will appeal to knowing the taste, tradition, and talisman of that country. For the growth of cultural exchange, my biggest contribution would be giving people love and a memorable time.
