

Money doesn't bring happiness

Experience, Happiness

As you have heard many times, money does not bring happiness. Happiness has to be gained. Good morning ladies, gentlemen and my fellow students I am standing before you declaring a speech on the topic does money make you happy. No doubt you've met people who appear to be trapped in an unsatisfying cycle of materialism and unhappiness. They confuse money for what is really supposed to be measured and thereby maximize the wrong thing. Among other things they leave out of the equation all kinds of success in our lives, in our families' lives and in our friendships, life that money does not measure.

Even their work choices reflect the sad mistake of forgoing what they love doing for what brings happiness. Do we really care about one-upmanship than material comforts? Hardly. What the data tells us is that richer people are happier than poorer people. The reason is because richer people think that they are more successful in life but it's success, not money that we really crave. Money can buy so many things except for happiness. Happiness is gained when you have fun in your life with family and friends.

That in my opinion I can do without money. Happiness is a feeling, the things that make me happy are swimming, playing, having fun. All money can do is make a person live a life in a hard way without fun. Nowadays rich people spend most of their time counting money and you know time lost is never gained. In conclusion, people, let's live life, love life and not let money get in the way of our happiness. I stand here and inform you that my opinion is that money does not make you happy. Thank you
