

The use of the culture in the expression of customs of a society

History

Reflection

The research concerning the development patterns in Classical and Hellenistic Greek has helped me in understanding that culture plays a vital role in the expression of customs of a society. Throughout the process, it was easier to note that the development took a gradual pace. It was an interesting aspect to note that the developments that undertook in the Greek Empire were completely different from each other.

It is evident to me that the process of development was quite effective in terms of cultural differences and values. At one point, the poetic development took swiftly in terms of the subject of matter while on the other hand, architectural changes were also noticed. Therefore, I have come to know that the change in one walk of life makes an impact on all the other paths at the same time[Wes97].

Furthermore, the mythical characterization of the role models also changed as the democracy was put into practice. As a matter of fact, the change in the lifestyle can easily be noted in the time of Hellenistic Greek. When I undertook comparison, I marked that different areas of the Greek culture allow understanding that literature was contributed with the newer subjects because every other field of interest was also changing.

Through the above comparison of the analysis of the two eras and areas of culture, it came to my knowledge that each area was affected largely by the political changes and the way policy took place. The lifestyle of the Greeks was marginally changed as well.
