Multi Cultural Issues 1

What does School Counseling for the Twenty-First Century examine in the context of multicultural environment There is always potential for conflict in a diverse and multicultural environment. School Counseling for the Twenty-First Century tries to understand and appreciate the different inborn qualities of individuals. It also tries to examine the unlike innate character of individuals in the context of the present technological revolution, economy and resultant changes in society. It further explores and establishes the relationship between culture and conflict. How can this conflict be resolved in a diverse culture Graduate students, professors and practicing school counselors have a major role to play in bringing about a solution to this malady. Once this trouble causing diverse and innate nature is identified, trained; and managed with due thought and attention, relationships can improve. And this improved environment can avert conflicts at work, studies; and even at play. Multicultural training is one of the answers for this social illness.
