

Someone returning soul. however devoid of living tissue,

BUSTER

Someone once asked me, what is calculus? It's simple. Calculus is the branch of mathematics devoted to the study of the phenomenon called change.

Several quantities both abstract and physical are capable of changing. Chief among them is time.

In fact this plane of which we exist is intricately time bound, any change will have to be time dependent. In short, the change in time is change itself. No change can occur without time changing. Time undergoes such a change that even men has yet to fully understand the complex physics behind the relationship between changing time and everything on this plane. Imagine a flowing water body or river.

That is time. We are floating in the water down. Every second pushes us forward. You can notice the changing vegetation and geography at the river banks. That's the changing world confronting us every new year as time pushes us forward. If we can leave the water, we would be free from time. We would be ageless because age is a subset of time. In addition we can move upstream or downstream before everyone else.

That would be time travelling to the past or to the future. We do however leave the water though. That's when we die. We leave the time bound world for good. The question is, if our technology is able to preserve a body with living tissue, can the soul be released into the other plane and then returned? Maybe the Egyptians discovered this and mummified their bodies for the returning soul. However devoid of living tissue, the bodies would be incapable of accommodating a returning soul. And good thing too.

If the Egyptians had successfully returned a soul, we would be ruled by pharaohs today who would have time travelled and have an unfair advantage over our world. And yes. Thanks to Isaac Newton and Godfreid Leibniz, calculus has opened our minds to the effects of time on our world and the change everything experiences. However we have yet to understand how time affects age. That understanding will allow men to increase or decrease his tenure on this plane.

The rich and powerful would surely love to see that day come. For now, they can only live out their tenure like everyone else. Came with nothing and depart with nothing. Time will keep its gold and silver on this plane.
