Northumberland. The police force has increased its efficiency towards meeting its policing obligation in the wider area of its jurisdiction.

It has recruited sufficient number of police officers to do adequate patrols throughout the area of their operations. All the units have all the required facilities such as wired and remote radio services to boost communication among the officers while in the field and office. This increases the level of coordinating various operations by the officers away from the office. The police force has a specialized team of detectives that have the capacity to investigate various categories of crime across Boston. In this manner, the Northumbria is capable of guaranteeing security to all members of the society.

The police force has also protected business and private property against possible burglary or theft. Finally, Northumbria has managed to reduce the incidences of general public crime, burglary, and murder cases by a larger margin more than ever in the once insecure Ponteland, Northumberland.

Marks and Spencer Marks and Spencer is the largest British retailer based in Westminster City, London. The retailer firm operates about eight hundred stores in the United Kingdom and additional four hundred spread across the world. The firm exclusively sells clothing and other luxury products such as watches and jewelry.

The retailer firm is remarkably vibrant in rolling various programs as stipulated in its Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) policy. The retailer has attained its organizational responsibilities through its CSR policy in a number of ways as discussed in the subsequent sections. The firm is known to support many charity organizations such as Oxfam, UK Child Care and several children or orphans' homes. The contributions it channels to these beneficiaries are either material or monetary. It is a common observation that clothing and beddings in many children centers and homes were donated by Marks and Spencer (M). In some cases, however, M also finance health programs, free home keeping and educational programs, and provision of public utilities for instance bus stands and sports facilities in the public place around their stores and retail outlets.

In many schools, M funds many educational programs throughout Britain as a sure means to ensure the children get quality education notwithstanding insufficient funding educational centers receive from the government. Through various programs of the M, it is most apparent that the British number one retailer identify with the needy in the society, provides better living conditions, education, quality healthcare, and food to all. In general, M is sensitive to the human needs across the world.
