History, American History

African Americans, 1 who e and 26 Hispanics. All the people show some kind of interest in the American dream, although they weren't sure about what the American dream consisted of. The first question asked was if they were born in the U. S and the said yes and 20% say no, the majority that say yes, accept their believe in the American dream and how United States have helped their throughout their lives, and the people who answer no had less credibility in the American dream because they had to face the job struggles for not being citizens. We believe that we get that result because the majority of the people interviewed were teens and the majority of teens in the valley are born here because their parents came searching for job. The second question asked was whether or not they believed that United States give opportunities to everyone and 68% said yes and 32% said no, revealing that United States is a source of opportunities and aspiration to the majority of the people who believe in the American Dream, however, we can conclude that the people who were agree with it faced difficult circumstances, where United States was the only one who gave them a solution or benefit.

We ask in a scale 1-10 how familiar they were with the American dream and all of the people responded 5 and above. 36% answered 9, 32% 7, 28% 8, 12% 5 and the smallest one was 1% in 6 and 10. The bigger result was in 9, 7, 8 because the of the people were Hispanic and there is more probabilities to them to have experienced in any stage of their lives the American dream for not being entirely American. On the contrary 5, 6 and 10 probably were the smallest Hispanics do not feel associate with such extreme circumstances to appoint 10 and have not received much help, benefits, or experienced issues to pick 5 and 6. The fourth question was, what do you think is the American dream? , and give 4 different options; freedom, money, a stable job or happiness and they mostly responded to freedom and money with 44% and 32% , on the other hand a 24% choose a stable job and a 12% happiness that reveal that American dream is defined and searched mostly for freedom. We get that opinion because the majority of the people interviewed were men's and they have a stronger sense of patriotism and many youth came to the US at a young age and change the way they view independence and liberty.

Money was also what people thought was the American dream it gives people opportunities to work and be able to pursue money. Happiness and a stable job had lower percentages because happiness can be accomplished in any place of the world and also stable jobs are everywhere. However, not with a just or good payment that the United States offer . This survey had the purpose to inform who believed more in the American dream teens or adults. We noticed that more teens believed in the American dream but it was because we asked more teens than adults. We could find that even if the adults responded the teens will continue having advantage because people at a young age come here for better life and searching prosperity and also recognizing the opportunities that America brings to them.
