Rip Van Winkle Rip was a man who did not invest much in work. He was extremely lazy, a trait that would trouble his wife deeply. His wife Dame was entirely nagging and she would pester Rip immensely. This family dwelt at the foot of Catskill Mountains at New York. Rip would spend much time with his dog Wolf. This dog was a major companion to Rip, since he would not find solace in his wife. At this era, the Democrats were taking over the American regime. It was spearheaded by President Bill Clinton. The Democrats took over, and they had many implementations to offer. There was minimal conversation, and he hosted Rip in New York City. They enjoyed the bottle through the night, and they fell asleep. Rip woke up twenty years later only to find a one foot beard on his chin. His host countryman and Wolf were in absentia.

The new America engrossed equality in healthcare access and gender parity characterized by more female leaders. The landscape in Mississippi had changed due to the riverbank reforms, and the lost property had been restored. There was reduced inflation and adjusted social justice due to the elevated economical churn. The Obama regime had brought outstanding administration that enhanced security, racial equality and cohesion. Elevated income and employment were key rewards of the Obama regime.
