Is the global expansion of architectural practice a result of style?

The research effort will investigate:

- the risk of intellectual property

- the expansion of computer networks, because they are infiltrating daily life

- the development of CAD (computer aided design) on 27/7 basis and development of virtual design

- the impact of Internet communications on architectural design

- the expansion of architectural practices in recent years

- the advantages of architectural profession due to computer developments

- the workingenvironmentof architects and its differences depending on the either country or region

- the adaptation of architectural practice to the requirements of the new country

- the impact ofglobalizationon architectural firms and changes caused

- the new ideas, typologies and innovations proposed by the architects in sphere of urban patterns and building types

- the import of Dutch style and its implementation in the USA

- the physical, emotional and social growth of cities in terms ofresponsibilityand problem-solving

- the expansion of architectural firms internationally

- the economic and social changes caused by globalization

- the opportunities for non-traditional architectural design

- the role of architectural design in modern society

- the danger of homogenization

Bibliography

Artifice, Inc.(2005, April 20). Retrieved November 6, 2006, from http://www. architectureweek. com/2005/0420/index. html