

The future of tenet healthcare corporation

Business

Tenet, however, was not ready to give up so easily. They have instead inked a deal with Aetna, another health care giant, to continue to provide services to both Aetna commercial and Medicare Advantage customers. They have also rejected the bid made by Community Health Care, and taken the hard step of literally swallowing a 'poison pill', according to the Dallas Business Journal - filing paperwork to cover they're incurred $2.0 million losses, and protect the rights of their stockholders, as well as trying to make sure those looking to take over do not succeed.

Amid the overhaul of the nation's health care system, and the eventual consolidation of health care companies, Tenet's future looks uncertain. If it can continue to hold off bidding rivals and turn some of its losses into profits, then it may yet succeed. But based on the research that I have uncovered, its future does not look strong.
