

Forensic psychology assignment

Psychology

ASSIGN BUSTER

An example would be getting called to a court of law to testify on a defendant's mental stability in a trial situation. A forensic psychologist has to develop and review appropriate treatment and rehabilitation programs for the offender such as anger management, treatment NT for drug addiction and social and cognitive skills training. The field of forensic psychology is very competitive one needs a masters degree doctorate level degree.

Important undergraduate classes that should be taken include, statistics, criminology, abnormal psychology, social psychology and criminal law.

They must have a strong background and expertise in psychology which usually involves working in a practice dealing with patients over a number of years. Other skills one needs: 1. Pristine critical thinking skills: 2. Thorough knowledge of social and cultural issues, 3. Strong writing and oral presentation skills, 4. Familiarity with mental health law, 5. Case law and courtroom procedure. 6. Must also be able to maintain calm under pressure. Some employment opportunities that come along with being a forensic psychologist include being able to work in police stations, courthouses, and law firms.

Prisons, jails, and juvenile detention centers also hire forensic psychologists. The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that the average salary of a Forensic Psychologist was $64, 140. Some universities and colleges worth attending include the University of Arizona and the University of Virginia, for they offer degrees specifically focused on forensic psychology that combine courses in both psychology and law. It is very tedious work to first even become certified as a forensic psychologist, for such a degree typically takes 5-7 years of graduate study.

<https://assignbuster.com/forensic-psychology-assignment/>

Professional organizations of this field include the International Association of Correctional and Forensic Psychology and American Board of Forensic Psychology. Over the past two decades, there has been a steady growth rate with the field of forensic psychology. It is expected for the practice in psychology and law to increase 22% in the next ten years. Pursuing a job in the field of forensic psychology takes almost an interminable amount of time and is only for those willing to work in a highly stressed filled environment NT.