True Meaning of Family Family is “ a social unit consisting of one or more adults together with the children they care for. ” Merriam-Webster. com.

Merriam-Webster 2011. Web. 11. September 2011. Family is a very important part of everyone’s life, therefore we should learn to appreciate our families and never fail them. Family teaches us many significant things we need to live our lives successfully in order to prosper. True family values consist of love, guidance, and support.

For one thing, the most distinguished characteristics families hold is that of love. Everyone in this world needs love and affection and someone who cares for them in order to feel satisfaction. For a family to stick together, everyone who is part of it must love each other unconditionally no matter what happens. Love within a family is extremely admirable and it is also the most amazing feeling you can ever experience. Now a days a lot of families are broken and dysfunctional and tend to lack of love and that is what hits me the hardest and just makes me realize how exceptionally important it is to love your family.

Additionally, not only is it love that makes up a family but a family also provides you with guidance. In order to accomplish great things in life you need people who are always going to stick by you pressuring you and guiding you in the right direction. In that case, you should always have your family who will always tell you what is best for you and will most definitely always lead you in the right path. Guidance defines who you will be in the future since that is what helps us distinguish good from bad decisions. It is imperative for family to give us guidance through childhood so that we grow to be responsible and respectful adults.

Lastly, another concept families hold is support. Family support doesn't necessarily have to be financially but also emotionally and spiritually. In a time of need such as when you become ill, troubled in a relationship, or you're just simply going through rough times and need someone to bring you up. When ever you may be having trouble with anything you should always go to a family member first since they are the ones who know you best and care for you the most and will help you as best as they can since your good is always in their best interest.

Family tendencies are usually to be supportive one hundred percent no matter what the situation may be. All in all, your families are the only ones who will be standing right beside you through thick and thin. Once again, true family values consist of infatuation, direction, and encouragement. My family is always put above all things and as they say blood most definitely does run thicker than water.
