Why Women Keep Secrets couldn't have. Secrets have been kept from the time we were little all the way up to adulthood. Women are known to be able to keep secrets better than men, in some cases. But the question is why, why to women keep secrets? Women keep secrets from their husbands on a daily basis. Women keep secrets from their families to protect them from danger. Some secrets are kept regarding their past. Some women keep secrets, because they may feel that this is the only control that they may have in the relationship. Secrets are kept in many of today's homes.

Many families are surrounded by secrets that only the wife knows about. A secret, as simple, as who broke daddy's favorite mug can be turned into a very big secret if the truth is never revealed. When a mother feels that if a secret will cause harm to her family, she will do whatever to protect her family. This could include keeping whatever that may exist to herself. No matter if it is something that should be told and pertains to family as a whole. As in the short story "Interpreter of Maladies," Mrs. Das was keeping a secret from her husband regarding an affair she once had eight years ago.

As a result of this affair, a son was born. Mrs. Das secret was kept to protect her family from the embarrassment of her infidelity. Like Mrs. Das, there are many other families that are dealing with this same secret in their home. Women sometimes feel that her past is no one's business but her own. She keeps her past relationships to herself. She may never reveal the names or even how many exes she had. Many women don't reveal their past relationship to their current husband or boyfriend because they don't want to open brings up bad relationships and experiences that have caused lots of pain.

Some husbands or boyfriends say that they don't want to know about their wives or girlfriends past. Many women say if they don't ask, they don't tell. Some secrets are best kept a secret as long as it's not about the fundamentals of the marriage or relationship and sometimes some men don't want to hear everything. Then, there are women that keep secrets because they feel that this is their way of being in control of this part of the relationship. For example, women may keep a secret of how much those shoes cost that she bought at the mall. She may even keep the secret of how many pairs of shoes she may have or how many purses she has.

I personally feel that this is okay. He really doesn't need to know. I have a friend who calls her man constantly telling him exactly what she's doing to the T. Honestly, what man cares that you got two for twenty dollars flip flops on sale. I believe that if it doesn't affect your relationship, then he really don't have to know. The fact that there's this secret no one knows about but them. This is something that only she knows and others wish they knew. Most of the time she feels good, but at other times, she wishes she could tell someone.

She then remembers that if she tells someone, it wouldn't be her secret. Someone else would know. As I said, secrets been kept from the beginning of time. Small secrets were encouraged while we were kids. As we grew into adults, those small secrets eventually grew into larger ones that many women today are continuing to keep. Whether it is to protect her family from the unknown or it may be a secret that is unimportant to her spouse or boyfriend, or even a secret that makes her feel in control; secrets will continue to be kept especially in women. So the question remains, why do women keep secrets?
