Politics, Democracy

This “ Causes-Course-Consequences,” or CCC, chart is another excellent way to summarize important information from history. In it, you identify the cause or causes of a particular event and what happened during the event, called the “ course.” Then you identify the outcomes, or “ consequences,” of the event. It will help you remember the significance of many historical events and help establish connections between them.

Part 1: Choose eight events from the lesson. Complete the following chart by using information from the lesson and putting it into your own words.

two must be political events

two must be economic events

two must be social events

two events of your choice

One example appears for you.

Event Name	Type of Event	Causes	Course	Consequences
------------	---------------	--------	--------	--------------

1980 Election	This was a political event because it caused a change in the government. Americans wanted a firm, patriotic leader who had a plan to fix the economic problems carrying over from the 1970s. Jimmy Carter was running for reelection, and Americans overall were very unhappy with his leadership. Ronald Reagan emerged as his challenger, a former actor with great public skills and a plan. They elected Ronald Reagan in 1980 who had a controversial plan for fixing the U. S. economy, later dubbed “ Reaganomics.”
